

Feedback on alumnus

to Kharkiv School of Architecture

By Lilet Breddels, architectural researcher, curator and editor, Task Force team member of ro3kvit: urban coalition for Ukraine, director of Archis.org, publisher of Volume Magazine, teaching at KU Leuven.

Alisa Alexandrova joined the ro3kvit coalition team in May and actively cooperated with us as a researcher and urban planner.

In the early stages, we worked together, so I had the opportunity to see her professional capacities and the effectiveness of her education.

Alisa has always actively participated in the discussed strategies and focuses of the coalition's work, showing her understanding of the integration issue.

We worked together on researching and defining pillar topics for the future recovery of Ukraine. Alice was an active member of the team that made field trips for research work in the affected cities and worked with data and analysis requirements for on-site tasks.

I believe Alisa is a versatile and interesting person, she shows a strong understanding of professional tasks and has the necessary training to fulfill them.

Currently, we work on different projects and she implements her architectural and urban planning skills in developing a recovery strategy for the city of Mariupol.

I follow the activities of the Kharkiv School of Architecture with interest and consider its work on the education of young Ukrainian architects prepared to operate with nowadays challenges.

Since the future long process of recovery of Ukraine, I would like to advise involving students in working with real cases on-site during their studies, especially on senior courses.

On the part of the ro3kvit coalition, we would like to note that we are ready to take students and graduates for internships, as well as develop joint educational programs to improve the capacity of the future generation of architects.
